"So Many Things to Buy to Make Us Happy"

Mildred Loomis

Follow this and additional works at: https://research.library.kutztown.edu/greenrevolution

Recommended Citation
Loomis, Mildred (1965) "So Many Things to Buy to Make Us Happy," Green Revolution: Vol. 3 : Iss. 6 , Article 7.
Available at: https://research.library.kutztown.edu/greenrevolution/vol3/iss6/7
Letters to the Editor

Three H Suggests Course
To the Editor: We are getting replies from our ad and appreciate the interest in the Green Revolution of Three H Institute.

Where we can show, with enough advanced, would it be of interest to Three H Planners to conduct a special Three H Planned course of School of Living members to work, in a group, reduced fee? We would have checked the nearest Three H and may be able to contribute much to your information. We are, in the near future, directors. We are, in the near future, directors. We need some help in teaching, and we need more time. A seemingly endless cycle, for the inner need is not satisfied.

Psychologists say that the real source of this uneasiness is a dissatisfaction with our selves. An honest look confirms this. We believe our way of life will not work; we find it difficult to relate easily and warmly with others.

A new book Normal Neurosis, explains and develops this concept unusually well. Everyone has three basic emotions: love, fear, and anger. When we experience two of these, we are balanced; the third is the inner need that psychologists think is the source of our uneasiness. For example, if you love your mother and are afraid of her, you are balanced. People may be afraid of you, so you decide that you must love them. So much of us do not, as adults, know what we really are; what we really want; what we are capable of. All of our standards of reality are out of date. In not letting us as children live out our own lives, in not letting us make choices and take their consequences, adults fail us. As perceptive Dr. J. C. M.,

Dear Editor,

Jaque needs silk-screen equipment. His book, The Green Revolution, was written to bring a new awareness and appreciation to the use of native plants for building a self-sufficient lifestyle. The book was originally written in a very personal manner, and the author included his autobiography as well. It is a fascinating read, and the book contains many practical tips for growing your own food and living a more sustainable lifestyle.

The book is available for $5 per copy, and we encourage you to support the author's efforts by purchasing a copy. Proceeds from the sale of the book will be used to support Jaque's ongoing work and efforts to promote a more sustainable future. If you are interested in learning more about Jaque's work or how you can support his efforts, please contact us at the address provided.

Yours sincerely,

[Name]

[Organization]

[Address]