7-1-1966

Kern Homestead Reports

Ken Kerns

Follow this and additional works at: https://research.library.kutztown.edu/greenrevolution

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://research.library.kutztown.edu/greenrevolution/vol4/iss7/13

This Letter to the Editor is brought to you for free and open access by Research Commons at Kutztown University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Green Revolution by an authorized editor of Research Commons at Kutztown University. For more information, please contact czerny@kutztown.edu.
United States today.

In the Nation's Capital, the Green Revolution was introduced with a declaration of intent that the status quo is suggested as one of the chief goals. The idea is, I believe, that each individual possesses a snippet of real estate, whether or not he actually changes the mode of living in such a small area. In some cases, it may be a mere 500 square feet or less. Such a change is not without a certain amount of cost, but it is a step in the right direction.

Most people simply adapt the best available, most efficient square foot. When they go to a new place, they take along the things that they can't bear to part with. Sometimes, these possessions are not the most efficient or the most economical, but they are the things that are most important to them.

Manifesto Outlined

In answer to your question as to why the Green Revolution was undertaken, I would say that it was because the present mode of living is not adequate to the needs of the time. In the past, it has been said that the only way to improve the living conditions of a society is to build more homes. This is not necessarily true, however, as the Green Revolution has shown.

The Green Revolution is a movement that aims to improve the living conditions of people by changing the way they live. It is a movement that aims to make people more self-sufficient and more independent, and to reduce their dependence on technological and economic systems.

The Green Revolution is based on the idea that people should be able to produce food, energy, and other necessities for themselves. The movement aims to make people more self-sufficient and more independent, and to reduce their dependence on technological and economic systems.

The Green Revolution is a movement that aims to improve the living conditions of people by changing the way they live. It is a movement that aims to make people more self-sufficient and more independent, and to reduce their dependence on technological and economic systems.